"WHY AT COLLEGE?"
ASKS MOTHER IRENE

President Discusses the Views and Ideals of College Women.

"Never forget that life with its many opportunities is for each one of you a grave responsibility which you cannot shirk without injustice to God, to your neighbor, and to yourself. With childhood, with childhood came special responsibilities, each bringing its special responsibilities.

"Today you are women, college women, students of a college whose objective is to make of you cultured, refined, strong Catholic women capable of entering the world around you and making that world the better for your presence. To do this, we must have your earnest co-operation."

This was the heart of the message which Mother Mary Irene, president of the college,

'Corporate Collegiennes' To Attend St. L. U. Prom

As "corporate collegiennes" of St. Louis University, all Fontbonne students are interested in the Conclave Prom at which the College will be represented by Agnes Collins of the junior class. Many Fontbonne students will attend this annual dance which will be held in the St. Louis Gymnasium, Wednesday, Feb. 21.

As your maid, Agnes Collins will be one of the guests of honor at an informal dance given at the Hotel St. Louis, Saturday, Feb. 18, by Delta Sigma Delta, a dental fraternity. Delta Sigma Delta was the lucky fraternity which was given the privilege of holding the only dance "to meet the prom maids."

The exoskeleton or shell of a nine-banded armadillo has been presented to the College biological museum by Mrs. L. M. Deck, of Oakland, California. This rare and valuable specimen measures three feet and three inches in length, being the largest type found within the limits of the state. The tail and head are so joined as to complete the handle of the basket formed by the shell.

The arrival of this unusual specimen has led the lovers of nature at Fontbonne to search into the habits of this uncommon member of the mammal family. Many interesting facts have been discovered, and the origin of the quaint baskets made of its outer shell has been traced to the Indians of South America, who after killing the animal, fasten the tail to the head, cover it with sand, and then place it in the sun.

There are many species of armadillo and their history dates back to prehistoric times. Specimens of the old-world or primitive type are found to have existed in the lower tertiary or Eocene formations of Wyoming. Armadillos differ in size, ranging from the "Pichichi," which is only three inches long, to the "Pridon rana" or giant armadillo, which is found in Brazil and measures one yard in length.

The armadillo, for the most part nocturnal in its habits, is of a brownish-black color.

JUNIOR VODVIL GETS NEW COMEDY FEATURE

Songs, Tiller Dances, Orchestra Numbers Are Booked.

"The Reader," a comedy sketch, is one of the many new features added to the vodvil bill to be presented by the junior class in the College auditorium, Thursday evening, Feb. 18, at 3:30 and 8 p.m., under the auspices of the Press Club.

The scheme of the playlet includes six characters impersonated as follows: Aunt Ethel, Mary Aloysia Knapp; Mrs. Saunders, Corinne Dewey; Miss Perkins, Loretto Henneley; Mrs. Patchett, Mary Keely; Miss Jones, Catherine Daver; Shirley, Naomi Droll.

Another entirely new number is a group of selections by the Fontbonne dance orchestra. New Tiller dances will be done by the Fontbonne Rockettes, who are: Agnes Reilly, Agnes Collins, Mildred Biachoff, Marle Freundenstein, Dorothy Joyce, and Naomi Droll. Rosalie Morrissey, Alice Igoe, and Loretto Henneley are the songsters for the program. The "Junior Gowns" have new selections.

Receive Guests of Corporate Colleges

Following a meeting of the board of corporate colleges of St. Louis University last Thursday a party of representatives of the board visited Fontbonne, among them being Rev. A. M. Schwiilsa, S. J., Rev. F. Y. Farganen, C. M., Rev. T. M. Knapp, S. J., Rev. T. S. Bowden, S. J., of the corporate colleges, and Mr. J. D. Eliff, of the University of Missouri, and Mr. George Zook, secretary of
A certain type of popular fiction writer would tell us that the world, America at least, has lost all its beauty. These writers picture it to us as a shabby, slum Main Street lined with filling stations and sign boards and shadowed by a great pall of factory smoke.

Can it be possible that anyone has looked at Life so one-sidedly? Has he never seen that same Main Street bewitched by the gold, silver magic of winter moonlight or wooed by the soft promise of Spring? Has he never seen it brightened by the saucy boldness of a sunflower or perchented by the simple earnestness of a violet? Has he never seen it blessed by the indescribable beauty of a baby's smile or consecrated by the dignity of an old woman's tears? Oh yes, the world is still beautiful for those who have eyes to see.

A young term papers mean nothing to us. Examination week and the end of the semester seemed "aged" off. Why not let go today what could be more easily and even better done tomorrow? Thus we reason, and cry aloud "Unfair" when term papers have not been written, and exams, which must be studied for, approach.

Would calling for term papers in the middle of the semester improve conditions? The "aged" until the end of the term would be cut into mere epochs if the papers could be required sooner. Term papers could then be treated more seriously and wholeheartedly, with much less exam week hanging over our heads.

A Freshman Waxes Indignant

To the Editor of The Font:

The freshmen are beginning to believe in the existence of proverbs and omens in our midst. How else can one explain the phenomenon "forecast" appearing in The Font for January 15, which revealed a carefully guarded secret of the freshmen? [How could it have been discovered, if not by some mystic power, since it embodied an entirely new idea?]

Feeling that our numbers were sufficient to sponsor successfully some get-together affair which might make for better acquaintance, we have taken it upon ourselves to invite you to a tea.

It was with surprise and indignation, therefore, that we read the remark in "Faxencrash" informing The Font readers that the freshmen would "break down and entertain." And to add insult to injury, an article appeared shortly after our announcement.

We feel this is carrying things a little too far. Faxencrash is the place for humor, with wit and good-natured consideration and placed in the dignified form of a news story it is no longer clever.

BREAKING OFF THE FAMILY TIE

It is more than a month ago now since old Betsy went away. She left so quietly that she would never have guessed it had not another case of "Auld Lang Syne." She was all whipped up after the farewell dinner and in virtually no condition to be out in the cold damp air. It was truly a heartfelt thing to do. For it was only just to see that she decided to accept our heartwarming proposal. We turned the corner at the front gate and couldn't make up our minds to go and perform some disgraceful maneuvers in an effort to ward off the being driven of the place. So we've been wondering. True, her eyes no longer had their luster, her nose was graying, and her body bent and broken, yet for some there was a love which no other car in the history of Foot homes ever enjoyed. Was she lost, strayed, or stolen?

From a long story short, this is what happened to Betsy. After much bickering, the owner of the house, Agnes Nibbsen, was traded in on a downtown dealer's for a brand new Chrysler coach. When the stranger rolled into the drive, first one and then another of the residents, who had been accustomed to pace themselves in Betsy after she was the owner of cardinals, lady bug, and affectionate pears in her direction. Within a week she was christened Phoebe and made to understand the willingness of their new owner to increase hospitality. The secret of this quick attachment is a large box of golf balls.

ANN THE APPLE GIRL

A reporter for The Font was asked to interview a young lady who deepened the other day. Was it advisable for her to disclose this letter from Jake which follows?

Dear Ann:

I am to tell you that your delightfully billy-club, when they don't come I need that word at it like, please. For the matter when I asked him if they were in and he was a letter to this from you. I just let one more out before me, so I can give inspiration from it.

Ann, if you hear all about those particular cows, there'll be so much to talk and you never think of it to the one who's it! But, Ann, you can get the green stuff from the Buffalo river; we wear for that nauseate we are going to when you come back home.

Oh, and Ann, they say that if the house is looking on you while you deep, you'll sure enough get ugly. Well, I expect to watch you keep it right, so I wont. You wouldn't want me to write you no more letters if it was... was... ugly. Would you Ann?

"Prom Is Ended, But Memory Lingers On!
Sing Students After Second Junior Prom"

Guests at Second Junior Prom

Safely hidden in a massive red and gold heart were the Junior Prom souvenirs, pearl chokers for the girls and monogrammed cigarette lighters for their escorts. The souvenirs were presented to the guests as they filed slowly down the hall in formal promenade.

This second Junior Prom of Fontbonne was held on Thursday evening, February 9, in the reception rooms of the Fine Arts building. Mildred Bischoff, president of the junior class, led the promenade, followed by Catharine Gunn, president of the senior class. The guests of honor, members of the senior class, were: Lendaro Ease, Catharine Gunn, Mary Grace Heiner, Lucille Perry, Helen Purcell, Bertrice Simpson and Margaret Tracey.

Mothers Arranging Party for Daughters

A final report on the card party and the appointment of a committee for the entertainment of the alumnae, seniors, and juniors of the College was the principal business of the Mothers' Club meeting of February 3. Of the $800 realized on the card party the Mothers' Club sent $250 to Rev. Mother Agnes to pay on its debt for the pews in the chapel which are its donation. The club has paid $1,450 towards the $2,250 which it owes.

Mrs. J. F. Gunn was appointed chairman of a committee to plan for entertaining the upper classmen of the college in the spring. Mrs. J. A. Purcell, Mrs. W. H. Heiner and Mrs. E. T. Hanlon will assist her on the committee.

M. C. Robinson At Her Piano

Mary Cecilia Robinson, of the Department of Piano, was chosen as accompanist to the voice students of Mrs. Mary Daly, who gave a delightful program of songs and arias over WEW Thursday evening, February 2, at 8 o'clock.

Miss Robinson, who has served as soloist and as accompanist in several other radio concerts, as well as for many programs in Fontbonne auditorium, will be heard soon in a graduating recital.

Madame E. Guerin, originafor and promoter of the National Flanders Field Poppy Day, was scheduled to give a French impersonation of Joan of Arc here this month, has been forced by ill health to return to France, and hence cannot keep her Fontbonne engagement.

President Discusses Ideals

delivered to the assembled student body, Thursday, Feb. 2.

Mother continued by listing the motives for attending college which she had received in answer to the question: "Why are you here?" The answers were classified under three main divisions, "worthwhile," "unworthy," and "worthless."

"I am here to fit myself for life," or "to better myself," when properly interpreted belong to the worthwhile group. In this group also may be placed, "My parents were eager for me to be a college graduate," "I shall need to earn my living in the years to come," and "I realize that a college training is necessary for any position worth while," and "Since my childhood the term 'college woman' has appealed to me and with the years the desire to be a college woman and all that the term connotes has grown stronger." The vague answer, "I came for the broadening and cosmopolitan effect of college life," was given the benefit of the doubt and placed among the worthy motives.

The worthless motives were: "Every adult member of my family boasts a college degree; I shall have nothing less," and "Everybody goes to college nowadays; I can not be out of the crowd." I read such wonderful stories about college life that I felt I must try it," was chided by Mother as "harmless but worthless."

"Well, I am here because I can't help myself. My objective is to study as little as possible, take all the privileges I can and make life miserable for myself and all around me." is an unworthy motive.

Mother professed herself delighted with the attitude of a student of Fontbonne who, in a letter to the editor of The Drake Dolphin, resented that periodical's characterization of college students as "undesirables," and "persons who dash furiously but futilely round and round." The dignity of college women has not been lost at Fontbonne, this student declared.
“Journeys of Jesus,”
by St. Joseph Nun,
Gets Wide Adoption

A life of Our Lord well calculated to bring home to youthful minds the real, living personality of Jesus is “The Journeys of Jesus,” the latest publication of Sister James Stanilious, of St. Joseph’s, Carondelet, well known to the students of Fontbonne through her constant interest in their activities. The first book of the series of three has been put into schools in this city and elsewhere, the second is in press, and proof sheets of the third were seen by a representative of the Font who visited the author recently.

More difficult to obtain from Sister James than the proof, however, were the many letters of congratulation and commendation which have come to her since the appearance of this initial volume. The writers include the revered censors of books of the archdiocese, Fathers Souvay and Koenensteiner, and many clergymen and educators from various parts of the country. One local school authority, Sister Clara, supervisor of the schools of the Sisters of Notre Dame, wrote that she has recommended that the series be introduced immediately in all the schools under her care. The books are planned for supplementary reading for grades five to ten.

Sister James is occupied now in the preparation of a manual of etiquette for use in the schools of the Sisters of St. Joseph. She, with Margaret Madden of Chicago, is the author of the spelling books in use for the past year or two in this and many other diocesan systems of schools. As supervisor of the parochial schools of her community for many years she became acquainted with the needs of the small students and has been extremely successful in preparing books which satisfy their demands exactly.

Entire Membership At College Alumnae Session

An alumnae meeting at which the entire membership of the alumnae association was present, a state of affairs almost unparalleled in the history of alumnae associations, took place Sunday, February 5, when Fontbonne College alumnae, the class of 1927, met in Ryan Hall. One explanation of this phenomenon is that the association has 80 or the alumnae association, the seniors of 1927.

Julie Marie Kirk, president, was in the chair. The business transacted has not been disclosed, but rumor has it that entertainment for the seniors was planned.

S. J. A. Alumnae Plan Party for Orphanage

An effort is being made to bring a large attendance of alumnae members, for the little ones, according to Margaret Flavin, chairman of the entertainment committee, enjoy meeting people even more than they like party dances. Contributions to defray the expense are being sent to the treasurer, Florence Noble, 8445 Kingsbury Boulevard.

The next meeting of the alumnae association will be held at Fontbonne Sunday, March 18.

Mrs. Alice Sheehan Dies

Death came Saturday morning of last week to Mrs. Alice Sheehan, of 8245 Pershing Avenue, a lifelong friend of the Sisters of St. Joseph and mother of Mrs. H. S. Glied and Mrs. Alice Dames, of the St. Joseph alumnae. Typical of her charity and her devotion for the Sisters is the provision she made during her last illness to supply the candy for the St. Mary’s Orphanage party to be held by St. Joseph’s alumnae for the little girls of St. Mary’s Orphanage.

Visitors From Kansas City

Among the visitors to the College last week were Mother Lauretia and Sister Clara Josephine, of St. Joseph’s Hospital, Kansas City, Mo. Their interest in Fontbonne centered in the cafeteria and other departments which they intend to imitate in the new building to be erected as a home for the student nurses of St. Joseph’s.
