Coast To Coast

THE LYNCHING (By Rosemary Harwood)
It was a strange and silent night.

And all was still in black Joe’s place, and the old man, tired, and the cold wind by the old man.

The who is dead.

A color of the rope, she screamed, then.

A man, and one able to care.

The wind was low, "No more, more, more."

The darkness slowly gathered form

The Orchid Club needs more than words for putting out this edition of the Font. But if you look for flowers, just then to the infor- mation offices. From here and the Arch you may send them; too, they don’t seem to be growing very well in the sun.

I think I'll dash off a little note to the Easter baying and see what kind of thing I can get for Easter. Catch you later.

Advice Given Freely
I received this in the morning mail:

Dear Sister Sarah:

(Walter Wendel’s girl beat me to it.) I am in a terrible fix, I got a note from church Easter Sunday with two forms. One of the forms states that I am not a member of the church and it seems to me that I was called, then the other fellow called me and I called you and I told you and I think he might anyway, I think I do. Yours truly, Charlotte."

I replied: Dear Charlotte, your ad- vice have you a friend? Is the number of Fairmount 224-00.

I mailed it on March 23, 1936. Saturday.
High Tide
By Rosamond Wardell, Jr.

It was a beautiful day, and the bright sky filled the air with its promise of a pleasant day. Elizabeth, by the time she stepped outside, her body filled with sun-filled energy, had already rushed, her usual verve, to the beach. Her sandaled feet moved nimbly over the soft sand, and she reached the ocean's edge. The waves splashed against her legs, and she inhaled the salt air. The sun warmed her skin, and her spirit rose to meet the challenge of the day.

The beach was a tapestry of colors, from the dark blue of the ocean to the lighter shades of the sand. People were scattered across the scene, some walking along the shore, others sitting on blankets, and a few just enjoying the moment.

Elizabeth stepped onto the boardwalk, her feet resounding on the wooden planks beneath her. She took a deep breath, inhaling the sea spray and the scent of the cliffs above. She was filled with a sense of freedom and possibility, ready to conquer the day.

She reached the boardwalk and paused, savoring the moment. The cliffs rose majestically above her, their rugged faces etched with the passage of time. She walked along the boardwalk, taking in the sights and sounds of the beach. The sound of the waves, the cries of seagulls, and the occasional laughter of children filled the air.

As she reached the edge of the boardwalk, she paused again. The cliffs loomed above her, their imposing presence a testament to the power of the sea. The ocean stretched out before her, its vast expanse seemingly endless.

Elizabeth stood there for a moment, lost in thought. The beauty of the day, the vastness of the ocean, the majesty of the cliffs—all these combined to fill her with a sense of wonder and awe.

She turned and continued walking, her steps light and carefree. The sun warming her skin, the sea spray caressing her face, she felt utterly alive and at peace with the world around her.

As she reached her destination, she smiled. The day had been perfect, and she knew that it would remain perfect for many more to come.
