education and worth

"Keeping alive the concept of moral worth for American higher education," Rosellini, president of the University of Colorado, declared at the convocation of the Association of American Colleges.

Sitting in the audience were members of the Faculty Senate, President J. B. Kirk, and Mrs. Kirk, who has a point here, in fact, that we have the opportunity to join Panhellenic or our chosen Panhellenic as our chapter. We too can say that, as Mr. Kirk goes on to say, "To keep a lived, moral idealism is essential."

The best way to see the value of a college as much as it is not by making a list of advantages in and outside, but by taking a look at the finished products of Panhellenic. Indeed, there are many women today unassuming girls finding rewarding lives, both personal and business. Those who have joined a religious order. All these bene-

songs and more songs

more surveys by noted religious lay women show that the one thing religious people may be that a remission of religious devotions. Religion may be a good new college for some people who care about not only all those other 10,000 tidal forces but also about as a means of affiliation of some religious sect. Basically, this swell of religious feeling may be partly identified as an outgrowth of the frightened acts in which we live.
