Agree Existentialism Is Not Philosophy, but Attitude

"Existentialism has performed a service of our subconscious by stressing the importance of the individual," said Sister Rita Marie, of the philosophy department, before the annual St. Thomas Aquinas seminar, March 5, 1960.

"Strictly speaking, existentialism is not a philosophy but rather an attitude toward reality. Kierkegaard's 19th-century philosophers, their founder, does not exist in God's existence. Rather, to encouners exists in the crisis of anguish and despair by a passionate free choice."

"However, under the influence of the foundations that Jean Paul Sartre, existentialism has become a philosophy of given and doomed, of the meaninglessness of life. This pessimation with the in-indual attuned to every van-uns."

Seven students in the department participated in the session. Following is a continued version of another committee's talk.

Bonnie Raynor: "As seen from the existentialist, is a poorly grasp of the confused, the confused thing as subject to fear, dread, anguish, and despair. Most existentialists deal deeply with God and refer to Him as out of the question or an impossibility. Having abandoned all belief in the existence of God, and the brotherhood of man, the existentialists depend completely on themselves. These characteristics common to all existentialism are freedom subjectively, and the concrete method.""

A.C.A.D. 1959 pursuit of the common theme that man finds his values in learning to participate in being. The participation is not achieved by observing the individual in some vague cosmic essence, but by gaining awareness of man's personal significance and joining in the community of persons. It has been observed that this need for openness to others is the reason why Marcel, usually chooses a setting in a room where there is plenty of doors and windows that can be opened or closed for the situation of the other, and living with each other. As he himself has said, he is trying to make the observation of the soul in exile, of the soul which suffers from the lack of communication, of the soul which finds itself with itself and with others.

Catholic Gospel: "Two significant events, World War I and World War II, shattered all that the European people considered valuable and made them take notice of their wounding selves. This conflict of themselves was a war against the modern world and all its relative values, against the results of their own actions. It was urged the Europeans into an interpretive view of man, into a clearer awareness of his constituency, his freedom, and all that it entailed. This, then, is our war against man, and against the world of our times."

Marine Medal: "Strictly speaking, the Italian Renaissance is not a new philosophy. Seventy or eighty years ago the Italian Renaissance was taught in the social aspect in social studies. The Catholic Church is not a new philosophy. Seventy or eighty years ago the Italian Renaissance was taught in the social aspects of the college." Mr. Donald Thomas, who is managing editor of the school's weekly magazine, 'The Observer,' and president of the National Catholic Social Art Center Association.

Survey Shows Friends Vital to Family Happiness

(Editors’ Note: The “Good Writer” for this issue is Nati Gal- hula and the Student Warden of sociology at St. Louis University.

Not long ago a group of seniors here at Fontbonne were asked to complete a questionnaire designed on their own family, and the five families with whom their parents visited most often before the students entered school. The information obtained was being combined with that from approximately 600 other highschool and college students in various parts of the country, as part of the largest family study ever conducted by the United States. The study, “The Harvard-Southeastern Families,” is being conducted by two of the country’s foremost social scientists: Dr. E. Zimmerman of Harvard University and Dr. L. F. C. Ferris, both of St. Louis University. In order to determine the number of good and bad families, and the reasons why some families were successful while others were failures.

From the results so far gathered Dr. Zimmerman and Dr. Ferris have discovered a number of their original hypotheses, and have already uncovered some new phenomena. One such surprising result is the fact that 65 per cent of the American families with which children were dropped out of school before completing the secondary grade. Over a hundred years ago, “Dr. Cattell,” the statistician, found that 65 per cent of the children who attended school dropped out of school. Over a hundred years later, Dr. Zimmerman and Dr. Ferris found that 65 per cent of the American families with which children who attended school dropped out of school.

Patterns

Dr. Zimmerman and Dr. Ferris have also been able to identify some common patterns in the families which have not done well, and they have shown that the families which have the same factors in common are the families which have done well.
